

UN Calls Out Saudi Arabia for Killing Yemeni Women and Children

United Nations, September 23 (RHC-teleSUR)--In a rare move, U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-Moon called out Saudi Arabia on Thursday for airstrikes in Yemen that killed dozens of civilians, including women and children.

On Wednesday the U.S.- and U.K.-backed Saudi coalition that has been bombing Yemen since 2015 struck a house in a residential area in western Yemen Wednesday, killing 26 people, according to medics and residents.

"The secretary-general condemns the multiple airstrikes by the Saudi Arabia-led coalition on 21 September in the Red Sea port city of Hudaydah, Yemen, which killed and injured dozens of people, including children and women," U.N. spokesperson Stephane Dujarric told the media.

Ban also urged the belligerent parties to reinstate a cease-fire and to come to the table for peace negotiations, since a "political settlement that addresses the legitimate concerns of all parties remains the only viable solution to the conflict."

Hundreds have been killed in airstrikes in Yemen that have hit schools, hospitals, markets and private homes, and nearly half of Yemen's 22 provinces are on the verge of famine, according to the U.N. World Food Program.
