

President Raul Castro Sees Off Cuban Health Brigade to Fight Ebola in Sierra Leone

Havana, October 2 (RHC) -- Cuban President Raúl Castro sent off 165 health specialists who were flying to Sierra Leone to join the battle against the Ebola virus outbreak which has caused thousands of deaths in West Africa.

This morning's edition of Granma newspaper reported that the president shook hands at the foot of the plane's stairs with each one of the Cuban collaborators, who left to comply with the sacred duty of saving lives.

The group is made up of 63 doctors and 102 nurses and medical specialists with more than 15 years of experience. About 80 percent of them have previously carried out international health service, mainly in Africa.

Executives of the health brigade to Liberia and Guinea are also traveling to prepare the basic conditions prior to the arrival of the Cuban collaborators in both countries.

Cuban government officials participating in the ceremony at José Martí International Airport included José

Ramón Machado Ventura, Second Secretary of the Cuban Communist Party's Central Committee, and Cuban Health Minister Roberto Morales Ojeda.
