

London Denies Entry Visa to Cuban Anti-terrorist Fighter Rene Gonzalez

Havana, March 5 (RHC)-- The United Kingdom has denied an entry visa to Cuban anti-terrorist fighter Rene Gonzalez, who was invited to participate at the International Investigation Commission on the case of the Cuban Five, to take place March 7th and 8th in London.

On March 3rd, and few hours before Gonzalez was scheduled to take a flight to London, the British government rejected his visa application. The information, released by the International Committee for the Freedom of the Five, reads that Gonzalez is the main witness to testify at the event to take place at the prestigious Law Society in London.

The British Immigration and Visa Office denied the visa based the UK's Immigration Law which, according to Item 320, any person who has served an over-four-year prison sentence cannot enter the United Kingdom. Although such a permit can be exceptionally granted, the British government says that Gonzalez's participation at the International Commission is not a strong enough reason to justify an entry visa.

The director of the Solidarity-with-Cuba Campaign in the UK, Rob Miller, who is one of the organizers of the Investigation Commission, said that they are very disappointed with the decision of the British government and noted that the visa denial can only be taken as a political decision, since the Cuban Five case has been politicized.

At least 20 witnesses and lawyers, including the U.S. legal team and relatives of the Cuban Five, victims of terrorist actions against Cuba and international law experts are already traveling to London to participate in the event.

Rene Gonzalez was the first of the five Cubans to return to the island after serving an unfair 13-year prison sentence in the United States. He was followed by Fernando Gonzalez, who was released last week after serving 15 years. Meanwhile, Gerardo Hernandez, Ramon Labanino and Antonio Guerrero are still being held in U.S. prisons serving unfair and extremely long sentences. The Five were arrested and jailed in 1998 after they monitored Florida-based violent organizations that planned terrorist actions against the Cuban people.
