

Two Cubans among the winners of the Casa de las Américas Literary Prize

Havana, February 1 (RHC)-- Cuban authors Reinaldo Funes and Alexis Díaz won the Casa de las Américas Literary Award in the categories of historical-social essay and literature for children and youth.

Their works Nuestro viaje a la luna. La idea de la transformación de la naturaleza en Cuba durante la Guerra Fría (Our trip to the Moon. The idea of natural changes in Cuba during the Cold War) and Piel de noche (Night Skin) deserved the coveted literary award in their respective categories. The results were announced at the Havana based cultural institution's Che Guevara Hall with the attendance of Cuban Culture Minister Alpidio Alonso and the institution's President Roberto Fernández Retamar.

The jury, presided over by Venezuela's Néstor Francia, said about the essay Nuestro viaje (Our trip)... that it's 'a contribution to the understanding of the revolutionary process, from a historical point of view and a dialogue with not so well-known and least spread areas of knowledge'. For its part, the jury headed by Argentine-Mexican Elena Dreser, said about the book of poems Piel de noche (Night Skin) by Díaz that it deals with 'a highly sensitive human theme' that will make readers 'better people.'

In the category of novel La ruta (The Route), by Argentina's Eduardo F. Varela, won the prize because, in the juror's words, it's 'an extraordinary vindication of the Argentinian Patagonia'. Ecuadorean author Juan José Rodiná took the award home in poetry with Yaraví para cantar bajo los cielos del norte (biografía no autorizada de un Banksy sudamericano) (Yaraví to sing under the northern skies, a non-authorized biography of a South American Banksy).

Racial Geographies across México and the United States*, by María Josefina Saldaña-Portillo from the United States.
