

White House Considers Limiting Deportations for Immigrants Without Criminal Records

Washington, April 25 (RHC)-- The Barack Obama administration is reportedly considering limiting the deportations of undocumented immigrants who do not have criminal records.

Recent figures show two-thirds of those deported under U.S. President Barack Obama had committed minor infractions, such as traffic violations, or had no criminal record at all.

The Associated Press reports the change is being considered as part of a Department of Homeland Security review launched amid rising criticism of Obama's record two million deportations.
