

Anti-Trump Protesters Flood Streets of Philadelphia

Philadelphia, January 27 (RHC)-- Thousands of demonstrators gathered in Center City, a district in Philadelphia, as the three-day the Congress of Tomorrow Republican Member Retreat got underway on Thursday. "If we don't get no justice, they don't get no peace!" protesters chanted as they rallied in downtown Philadelphia.

Chanting "Hey, hey, ho, ho, Donald Trump has got to go" and "Love not hate, that's what makes America great," the protesters walked from just north of City Hall to the nearby Loews Hotel, where Republican House and Senate lawmakers are holding their annual policy retreat. On Thursday afternoon as President Donald Trump arrived to speak at the convention, the demonstrators marched toward on the hotel.

The protesters carried placards condemning Trump for his controversial remarks about women and immigrants. The crowds were diverse in age and race and also included a group of disabled people.

Trump's election campaign had been hit with many controversies since its inception in early 2015. But he still managed to stun the world by defeating the heavily-favored Democratic candidate, Hillary Clinton.

Thousands of people since then have rallied in cities across the US to protest against Trump's victory, condemning his campaign rhetoric against Muslims, immigrants, women and other groups.

The real estate mogul's controversial comments include a call to ban all Muslims from coming to America as well as stopping Mexican migrants by building a long wall along the U.S.-Mexico border.
