

15,000 U.S. teachers strike in West Virginia over low pay, healthcare costs

Charleston, Feb 23 (RHC)-- In the U.S. state of West Virginia, schools are closed after some 15,000 public school teachers launched a two-day strike in order to protest for better healthcare and pay.

Teachers haven't seen an across-the-board pay raise since 2014, even as healthcare costs have risen sharply—leaving many teachers with dwindling take-home pay.

West Virginia is a so-called right-to-work state where strikes by public employees are prohibited. Asked by reporters about the legality of the labor action, West Virginia Education Association President Dale Lee said: "What are they going to do, fire 15,000 people?"

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/155924-15000-us-teachers-strike-in-west-virgina-over-low-pay-healthcare-costs>

Radio Habana Cuba