

Whistleblower Group Reports Suspicious Break-in at D.C. Office

Washington, February 26 (RHC)-- A Washington, D.C.-based whistleblower group has reported a suspicious break-in at their office. The Project on Government Oversight says unknown people appear to have broken in, shuffled papers on employees' desks and attempted to open a file cabinet, all while leaving computers and other valuable items behind.

Police determined the break-in was related to the group's work, which centers on exposing waste, fraud and abuse by the government, particularly by the Pentagon.
