

Chelsea Manning freed from jail after 62 days as WikiLeaks grand jury expires

Washington, May 11 (RHC)-- In northern Virginia, U.S. army whistleblower Chelsea Manning has been released from a federal prison after spending 62 days behind bars for refusing to testify to a grand jury.

Manning had been subpoenaed to answer questions about her leak of hundreds of thousands of secret State Department and Pentagon documents to WikiLeaks — including evidence of U.S. war crimes. The grand jury ultimately disbanded.

Chelsea Manning's freedom could be short-lived; her lawyers said in a statement that she will again refuse to testify in response to a separate subpoena, which could be as early as next week. If she refuses to cooperate with the court, she could spend another 18 months in prison -- the length of time that the new grand jury would be in session.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/190461-chelsea-manning-freed-from-jail-after-62-days-as-wikileaks-grand-jury-expires>

Radio Habana Cuba