

China achieves notable results in blocking COVID-19 human-to-human transmission

China's unprecedented public health responses to the COVID-19 outbreak have yielded notable results in blocking human-to-human transmission of the virus.

These results have prevented or at least delayed hundreds of thousands of cases, said a joint expert team consisting of experts from China and the World Health Organization (WHO).

The assessment was given at a press conference on Monday in Beijing after the 25-member team conducted a nine-day field study trip in China.
