

New Jersey prisoner in solitary confinement dies of COVID-19 while screaming for help

Newark, May 15 (RHC)-- The Intercept reports a woman imprisoned at the Edna Mahan Correctional Facility in New Jersey died of COVID-19 after prison officials refused to let her out of a locked shower even as she begged and screamed that she couldn't breathe — while at least one fellow incarcerated woman witnessed her dying.

Tiffany Mofield died on April 29th. She had reportedly been quarantined for two weeks after presenting COVID-19 symptoms and was later moved into solitary confinement even though her symptoms persisted. She is one of nearly 40 people to have died of COVID-19 in New Jersey prisons. At least 340 incarcerated people have died of the disease so far across the United States.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/222844-new-jersey-prisoner-in-solitary-confinement-dies-of-covid-19-while-screaming-for-help>

Radio Habana Cuba