

Sweden extends ban on visits to elderly care homes due to pandemic

Stockholm, June 16 (RHC)-- Sweden will extend its ban on visits to elderly care homes to August 31, Health Minister Lena Hallengren said. "This is one of many tough measures that needs to remain in place," Hallengren told reporters at a news conference.

More than 4,800 people have died in Sweden after being infected with the coronavirus, the vast majority of them over 70 years old and of those, many were resident in elderly care homes.

The ban on visits was put in place on March 30th.
