

Lawsuit alleges Tyson Foods managers wagered on meatpackers' coronavirus infection rate

Image not found or type unknown

(Image Credit: Tyson Foods)

Waterloo, November 20 (RHC)-- In Waterloo, Iowa, a wrongful-death lawsuit accuses Tyson Foods of “willful and wanton disregard for workplace safety” at a pork slaughterhouse that led to over 1,000 workplace infections and at least five deaths.

The family of meatpacker Isidro Fernandez, who died of COVID-19 on April 20, alleges in an amended lawsuit that “plant manager Tom Hart organized a cash-buy-in, winner-take-all, betting pool for supervisors and managers to wager how many plant employees would test positive for COVID-19.”

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/240243-lawsuit-alleges-tyson-foods-managers-wagered-on-meatpackers-coronavirus-infection-rate>

Radio Habana Cuba