

Nigeria Backs Down on Protest Ban; Generals Reportedly Found Guilty of Boko Haram Ties

Abuja, June 4 (RHC)-- The Nigerian government has reversed an order banning demonstrations for the return of more than 200 missing schoolgirls. The police commissioner in the capital Abuja had announced protests were no longer allowed over fears they could be hijacked by violent extremists.

But protesters flooded Nigeria's high court in defiance. Femi Falana, an attorney for the "Bring Back Our Girls" campaign threatened to challenge the ban in court.

A report in the Nigerian media today says ten military generals have been found guilty of aiding the Boko Haram, the militant group behind the girls' kidnapping and scores of other attacks. The Nigerian government has denied the claim.
