

U.S. considering housing migrant children on military base

Image not found or type unknown

U.S. considering housing migrant children on military base

Washington, March 6 (RHC)-- The U.S. government is evaluating whether to house unaccompanied migrant children at a military base in Virginia amid a sharp rise in migrants arriving at the US-Mexico border, according to a US Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) notice seen by the Reuters news agency.

A Pentagon spokesman confirmed that Fort Lee, a US Army facility about 48km (30 miles) south of Richmond, was under consideration.

The number of migrant children arriving at the southwestern border has increased in recent months, putting pressure on HHS-run shelters that house the children before they are released to parents or other sponsors in the United States.

In the notice, the HHS said it urgently needs to find more shelter space for unaccompanied minors. The department said it must “aggressively” find solutions for the rising number of children entering the country amid the COVID-19 pandemic.

The number of migrants caught crossing the border and allowed to enter the U.S. has increased in recent weeks, as President Joe Biden, a Democrat, has pledged to reverse many of the hardline policies of former President Donald Trump, a Republican.

U.S. officials are hurrying to find housing and speed up releases of a growing number of unaccompanied children arriving at the border after Biden exempted them in February from a Trump-era policy known as Title 42. That policy, issued on COVID-19-related public health grounds, allows U.S. authorities to rapidly expel migrants caught at the border.

“[W]e recognise the challenge of having these unaccompanied children come across the border and the influx that we’re certainly preparing for and preparing to approach,” White House Press Secretary Jen Psaki told reporters on Friday. “So, of course, we have to look for facilities in places where we can safely and humanely have these unaccompanied minors in the interim,” she added without confirming that Fort Lee is under consideration as one of those facilities.

Under U.S. law, children below the age of 18 caught crossing the border without a parent or legal guardian are labelled “unaccompanied” and must be transferred from Border Patrol facilities to HHS shelters within 72 hours. The law outlines separate procedures for children from Mexico and Canada that allow them to be more easily removed from the country.

Most children arriving without a parent or legal guardian are from Mexico and Central America.

The U.S. has used military bases to house unaccompanied children during previous spikes in arrivals, including during a surge of unaccompanied minors in 2014 under former President Barack Obama. In 2018, then-President Donald Trump signed an executive action that allowed the use of military bases to house undocumented families.

A Congressional Research Service report released shortly after the Trump executive action revealed that from 2012 until 2017, under the Obama administration, almost 16,000 unaccompanied children had been housed at US military bases in New Mexico, Oklahoma and Texas.

The Biden administration also plans to convert two family detention centres in Texas into facilities that would quickly process incoming migrant families and allow them to be released within 72 hours pending the outcome of their cases, according to two people familiar with the plan.

The HHS said as of March 4 the agency had 7,700 unaccompanied minors in custody, the highest level since 2019. As of last week, it had roughly 7,700 beds available.

Unaccompanied children go to the U.S. to reunite with family members or escape violence and poverty in their home countries, according to experts. In some cases, children arrive at the border with an adult, such as a relative or family friend, but are deemed “unaccompanied” because they are travelling without a parent or legal guardian.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/249815-us-considering-housing-migrant-children-on-military-base>

Radio Habana Cuba