

Bolivia and Venezuela strengthen bilateral relations

Venezuela's foreign minister met with Bolivian President Luis Arce, among other authorities and leaders of the nation | Photo: @jaarreaza

La Paz, April 25 (RHC)-- Venezuelan Foreign Minister Jorge Arreaza highlighted the consolidation of bilateral relations with Bolivia, in the framework of his official visit to the country. The Venezuelan top diplomat also noted that the Plurinational State returned to its position as a leading nation in terms of confronting climate change in the region.

"Yesterday evening we were received by brother President @LuchoXBolivia. We talked about our relations and the global leadership that #Bolivia has regained in the fight to stop climate change. I conveyed the embrace and fraternal greetings of President @NicolasMaduro," the Venezuelan foreign minister said in a message on his Twitter account.

As part of his visit, the Venezuelan foreign minister also met with former President Evo Morales to discuss the rights of Mother Earth and the current political situation in Bolivia. "We gave him the sincere embrace of the Venezuelan people and of his brother Nicolás Maduro. The defense of the Pachamama, the union of our peoples and popular democracy, always at the center of the issues we addressed."

Arreaza also met with Vice President David Choquehuanca and his counterpart, Rogelio Mayta, within the framework of the visit, with whom he discussed the bilateral cooperation agenda.

The Venezuelan foreign minister arrived in Bolivia on Wednesday night to attend the international forum on Mother Earth, an event that seeks to create ecological awareness and agree on mechanisms in defense of the planet

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/255241-bolivia-and-venezuela-strengthen-bilateral-relations>

Radio Habana Cuba