

Africa's last mountain glaciers could melt away in next 20 years

Another United Nations report out this week warns the last three mountain glaciers on the African continent are receding so quickly that they could disappear altogether within the next two decades.

United Nations, October 20 (RHC)-- Another United Nations report out this week warns the last three mountain glaciers on the African continent are receding so quickly that they could disappear altogether within the next two decades.

One hundred eighteen million people already living in poverty could face drought, floods or extreme heat. African countries make up 17% of the global population but are responsible for less than 4% of the world's greenhouse gas emissions.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/274470-african-last-mountain-glaciers-could-melt-away-in-next-20-years>

Radio Habana Cuba