

Pentagon to investigate U.S. airstrike that killed dozens of civilians in Syria

Image not found or type unknown

U.S. Defense Secretary Lloyd Austin says that the Pentagon has opened a high-level inquiry into the U.S. airstrike that killed dozens of women and children near the Syrian town of Baghuz in March of 2019.

Washington, November 30 (RHC)-- U.S. Defense Secretary Lloyd Austin says that the Pentagon has opened a high-level inquiry into the U.S. airstrike that killed dozens of women and children near the Syrian town of Baghuz in March of 2019.

This comes after a New York Times investigation found the military spent two-and-a-half years covering up the attack, even though the death toll was almost immediately apparent to military officials, with one legal officer flagging the attack as a possible war crime.

U.S. military officials downplayed the death toll, delayed reports, and sanitized and classified evidence of civilian deaths. U.S.-led coalition forces bulldozed the blast site, and top military leaders were reportedly not notified.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/278708-pentagon-to-investigate-us-airstrike-that-killed-dozens-of-civilians-in-syria>

Radio Habana Cuba