

Venezuelan president highlights results of international tour of Eurasia and North Africa

President Nicolás Maduro arrived in Venezuela after an international tour, in which he stressed the importance of building a new humanity based on cooperation. | Photo: Presidential Press Office

Caracas, June 18 (RHC)-- President Nicolás Maduro returned this Saturday to Venezuela, after completing an international tour that covered the nations of Türkiye, Algeria, Iran, Kuwait, Qatar and Azerbaijan and highlighted the results achieved in economic, financial and political matters, through the agreements signed with the rulers of the respective nations visited.

In statements after his arrival in Venezuela, President Maduro highlighted that the international agenda was intense and its results successful for the economic and diplomatic interests of the South American country.

"I have seen that an awareness of what should be a new humanity, without wars, of cooperation and solidarity, has been emerging. That word we carry is a word that has picked up the powerful echo of a new world geopolitics," he added.

The dialogue with other heads of state is part of a multipolar humanity that is beginning to emerge, without empires or hegemonies. "There is a new consensus for human dignity," he stressed.

In the world there is joy for Venezuela because it is perceived that it is recovering. He said that he received "the word of encouragement that the world accompanies the encouragement for a new non-rentier economy".

He stressed that the agreements reached in the six countries cover oil, agriculture, tourism, air transportation and agreements in science and technology.

"We are going to send hundreds of young people to be trained in science and innovation to several countries", he said.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/291097-venezuelan-president-highlights-results-of-international-tour-of-eurasia-and-north-africa>

Radio Habana Cuba