Quito, March 5 (RHC)-- Ecuador's Attorney General's Office (FGE) has filed charges against former President Lenín Moreno (2017-2021) and 36 other people for the 'Sinohydro' case. The 37 people are accused of alleged bribery and participation in an alleged corruption scheme linked to the construction of the Coca Codo Sinclair hydroelectric project.

In addition to the former President, the FGE filed charges against his wife, Rocío González; his daughter Ina Moreno; his brothers, Edwin and Guillermo; his sisters-in-law, Jaquelina V. and Martha G.; his friends, Conto Patiño and Xavier Macías; as well as Cai Runguo, former Chinese ambassador to Ecuador.

The Sinohydro case was first known as "Ina Papers" and the investigation began in 2019. Last February 22 the FGE announced the beginning of the process against Moreno and the other 36 people.

The case investigates the construction of the Coca Codo Sinclair hydroelectric project in Ecuador, developed by the Chinese company Sinohydro. Those involved allegedly received nearly 76 million dollars in bribes between 2009 and 2018. The FGE alleges that as vice president of Ecuador (2007-2013), Moreno facilitated the concession to Sinohydro to construct the hydroelectric dam.

The bribes would represent approximately 4 percent of the contracted value of the work, which was almost 2 billion dollars, the FGE has said, noting that its execution required 2.245 billion dollars.
