

United Nations says conflict in Sudan will produce nearly two million refugees

United Nations, September 8 (RHC)-- The United Nations Refugee Agency is warning as many as 1.8 million people will flee Sudan by the end of the year as fighting continues between rival military factions. The UN estimates the conflict has already displaced about one million people, and another 800,000 are expected to leave Sudan in the coming months.

Meanwhile, Doctors Without Borders is reporting Sudanese refugees arriving in South Sudan are suffering from an alarming rise of measles and malnutrition.

In the Sudanese capital of Khartoum, many residents say they cannot afford basic necessities, including bread. One local resident told reporters: "Bread is available, but people cannot buy it. The loaf of bread costs 70 Sudanese pounds, or 12 U.S. cents. People cannot afford it. This price is too high for them.”

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/333448-united-nations-says-conflict-in-sudan-will-produce-nearly-two-million-refugees>

Radio Habana Cuba