

Havana authorities deny rumors about sale of spoiled products

Havana, December 15 (RHC)-- Authorities in the Cuban capital denied false information circulating on social networks about the sale of expired, stolen products sold at modest prices in the informal market.

Through its Facebook page, the Government of Havana refers that the false information argues that there have been reported cases of intoxicated people, with vomiting and diarrhea, an alert made in the Buenos Días Magazine, on national television.

It is also described that the Cuban Ministry of Public Health informed that no product of the ARCOR brand should be purchased because they were contaminated with Salmonella bacteria.

"All of the above is false", declares the Havana Government's note and calls the population to get information through official channels. (Source: ACN)
