New York, February 21 (RHC)-- On the anniversary of the assassination of Malcolm X in 1965, Palestinians remember him not only as the fiery civil rights leader who challenged American racism but also as a powerful advocate for Palestinian rights, part of his unwavering commitment to justice and self-determination.

In 1964, a visit to a Palestinian refugee camp in Gaza deeply impacted Malcolm X. Witnessing firsthand the displacement and suffering caused by the 1948 Nakba fostered a profound empathy. He declared: "Our problem in America is a problem that is worldwide," drawing parallels between the Palestinian struggle and the Black American fight for equality. Malcolm saw both as battles against oppression.

Malcolm X wasn't afraid to challenge the dominant narrative surrounding Zionism, the movement advocating for a Jewish homeland in Palestine at the expense of its native people, the Arab Palestinians. He questioned the historical justifications for land claims, asking: "Only a thousand years ago the Moors lived in Spain. Did that give the Spaniards the right to go back and take Spain from the people who were living there?" Malcolm X saw Zionism as a form of colonialism, displacing Palestinians from their land and denying their right to self-determination.

Though initially sceptical of a two-state solution, Malcolm X's views seemed to evolve later in life. He began to see it as a potential stepping stone towards broader justice, emphasizing: "We need a free Palestine." He advocated for a solution that respected the rights of both Palestinians and Israelis, recognising the complexities of the conflict.

Malcolm X's voice played a crucial role in raising awareness about the Palestinian situation within the Black American community and challenging dominant narratives.

On Palestine, he said:

 "The problem that exists in Palestine is not a religious problem... It is a question of colonialism. It is a question of a people who are being deprived of their homeland." (1964, speech in Cairo)

 "Zionist logic is the same logic that brought Hitler and the Nazis into power... It is the same logic that says that because my grandfather came from Ireland, I have the right to go back to Ireland and take over the whole country." (1965, "Zionist Logic" essay)

 "We need a free Palestine... We don't need a divided Palestine. We need a whole Palestine." (1965, speech in Detroit)
