

Gambia interested in exploring new opportunities with Cuba

Image not found or type unknown

Sonko believes that no country has the right to subject the citizens of any nation to untold suffering, hardship and misery.

of any nation to untold suffering, hardship and misery.

Photo taken from Prensa Latina

Havana, October 12 (RHC)-- Gambia's new ambassador to Cuba, Seyaka Sonko that the willingness of his country and the largest Antillean island to explore new opportunities in relations is a clear demonstration that both are interested in moving forward.

"This partnership is deeply rooted in the basic principles of trust, mutual respect and reciprocal benefits," said the head of Mission, who presented the credentials to Vice President Salvador Valdes Mesa on September 18.

At the ceremony of his presentation to the rest of the diplomatic corps and officials of local institutions, Sonko affirmed that his objective and by extension that of the Embassy in Havana is to strengthen the existing cordial ties through productive commitments.

"In doing so, we also seek to actively liaise with other missions accredited to Cuba to foster greater collaboration in our collective goal of finding comprehensive and lasting solutions to the many complex problems that threaten global stability and peaceful coexistence," the ambassador asserted.

He also expressed his position that no country has the right to subject the citizens of any nation to untold suffering, hardship and misery, referring to states that apply policies of sanctions and blockades.

"If we truly wish to live in a just and peaceful world, we must always strive to live by the Golden Rule: Do unto others as you would have them do unto you," Sonko noted.

The diplomat recalled that the history of The Gambia and Cuba began in 1979 when they established diplomatic relations; however, it was not until 2000 that the Gambian government opened its embassy in Havana, "and since then cooperation between the two countries has been growing in importance," he remarked. (Source: Prensa Lartina)

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/nacionales/367322-gambia-interested-in-exploring-new-opportunities-with-cuba>

Radio Habana Cuba