From his account on the social media platform X, the president asserts that these attacks irresponsibly raise tensions in the Middle East and endanger international and regional peace and security with unforeseeable consequences.

Late Thursday, Israel bombed Iran. The explosions were heard in Tehran, the capital, and also caused fires in several buildings, media reports reported.

For its part, Iran's Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps confirmed the death of its commander-in-chief, General Hossein Salami, and other military personnel as a result of the attack.

Meanwhile, Israeli Defense Minister Israel Katz announced the declaration of a special state of emergency throughout the country after attacking Iran, arguing that a response with missiles and drones is expected in the immediate future.

The Israel Defense Forces (IDF) issued a statement saying that "following an assessment of the situation, it was determined that starting today, Friday, at 3:00 a.m.," the entire country will transition from so-called full activity to essential activity.
