

U.S. Airstrikes in Afghanistan Kill More Than Eighteen

Kabul, November 19 (RHC)-- At least 18 people have been killed in two separate U.S.-led airstrikes in the eastern Afghan province of Nangarhar. Twelve people were killed after a vehicle was attacked in the Bati Kot district on Tuesday. And local police authorities said six people were also killed in another U.S.-led drone strike in the Haska Mina district.

The U.S.-led forces have recently increased their air raids against civilian areas in Afghanistan. On Monday, a drone attack in Nangarhar Province left at least four people dead. Five people were also killed and three others wounded in a U.S. drone strike in the northeastern province of Kunar on November 16th.

The U.S. carries out targeted killings through drone strikes in several Muslim countries, such as Afghanistan, Yemen, Pakistan and Somalia. Washington claims the targets of the drone attacks are militants, but local officials and witnesses maintain that civilians have been the main victims of such raids over the past few years.

The United States and its allies invaded Afghanistan in October 2001 as part of Washington's so-called war on terror. The offensive removed the Taliban from power, but insecurity continues to rise across the country, despite the presence of thousands of U.S.-led troops.

The United Nations and several human rights organizations have identified the U.S. as the world's number-one user of "targeted killings," largely due to its drone attacks in Pakistan and Afghanistan.
