With the dispute today of the finals for men concludes here the Foil Grand Prix Villa de La Habana, with venue in the fairgrounds PABEXPO, west of the capital.

Among the men present in the lid are the French Enzo Lefort, 3rd-ranked, and American Race Imboden, winner of the contest in 2013 and 4th in the world rankings, and Gerek Meinhardt (5th).

The British James-Andrew Davis (6th), Czech Alexander Choupenicht (7th) and Italian Andrea Cassara (8th), who also seek to demonstrate their quality and talent in the lid.

The Italian Elisa Di Francisca, Olympic champion in London 2012, won the title by defeating Russian Inna Deriglazova 15-5 in the final of the women's foil, celebrated on Saturday.

Di Francisca was not so sure of winning because she had problems in her left ankle, but I'm happy for this victory in Cuba, a country that I love for its sun, climate and people, stressed to the press the foil fencer.

The Italian, 32 and 3rd in the world rankings, went on the attack in the 2nd period more decisively and scored 6 straight points to achieve an advantage not to lose to a narrow victory.

Di Francisca defeated 15-6 in the semifinals Jeon Hee Sook, South Korea; while Deriglazova, seventh universal ladder, 15-10 beat the French Ysaora Thibus.

Boxing

None of the Algerian Desert Hawks, who "landed" in the ring this Friday at the Ciudad Deportiva, could get airborne under the heavy blows of the Cuba's Los Domadores, who confirmed their leadership in Group A of the 5th World Boxing Series.

The evening began with light flyweight Joahnys Argilagos' dissertation of elegant and fast movements around the ring. And when his opponent Zoheir Toudjine was about to throw punches, the lad of only 18 years from Camagüey, dodged them stylishly for a unanimous decision to ensure his third win in 5 starts in the current series.

In the 56 kilograms division, the also young Andy Cruz, who alternates in the contest with the titleholder, the reigning Olympic king, Robeisy Ramirez, comfortably overcame Fahem Hammachi (3-0). As much as he wanted, the Algerian could not find the face or body of the Cuban with his fists.

Then came the bout that generated most expectations in the match. It was the debut of another Cuban rookie Kevin Brown (64kilos). Opposite he had Ahmed Boudiaf, a southpaw who gave him a little in stature. Having considered the first round, in which Kevin was imposing without the pressure, as expected he was gaining in confidence in the rest of the bout. And so it was.

After the third round, the Creole was already the sole owner of the ring and the unanimous 3-0 win defined the match.

If the three lads claimed victories without losing even one round, the middleweight Arlen Lopez was charged to rock the crowd with a barrage of punches in the very first round against Ilyas Abbadi, forcing the referee to declare a TKO.

And finally, Cuba depended on the best fighter of America in 2014, the spectacular Erislandy Savon.

It was hoped that his adversary, Bouziane Houna, would cover up too much. But his fate was sealed. Savon is unbeatable. Except that unlike his previous rivals in the current series, the Falcon himself remained standing during the 5 rounds.
