

Cuba Ready for Second Round of Mid-term Elections on Sunday

Havana, April 25 (RHC)-- One thousand 164 constituencies will carry out their second round of elections on Sunday, April 26, to elect delegates to the Municipal Assemblies of People's Power.

Delegates elected will join more than 11,400 already voted on April 19, in the first round of these elections, when a little over 88 percent of voters went to the polls, according to the National Electoral Commission.

The process closed with better results as compared to the previous one, since over 90 percent of the ballots were valid; and in that process more than half of the delegates in office have already been ratified.

Mid-term elections, in which delegates to Municipal Assemblies of the People's Power are elected, constitute an exercise of direct democracy, as part of the Cuban revolutionary process.
