

Images of Endangered Species Projected onto Empire State Building

New York, August 4 (RHC)-- In New York City, filmmakers and environmentalists projected images of endangered species onto the Empire State Building to highlight how human-driven climate change and the wildlife trade are threatening biodiversity.

Louie Psihoyos, director of "The Cove" and "Racing Extinction," said climate change is threatening species around the world. He told reporters: "This is the biggest issue mankind has ever faced. My friends in paleontology say that World War II will be a footnote in comparison to what's going on right now, which is one species, us, is causing this massive loss of biodiversity."

<https://www.radiohc.cu/en/noticias/internacionales/64770-images-of-endangered-species-projected-onto-empire-state-building>

Radio Habana Cuba