

Lightning Strikes Kill 67 in Monsoon-hit India

New Delhi, June 22 (RHC)-- At least 67 people have lost their lives in India due to lightning strikes as the annual monsoon rains drench the country. According to the country's National Disaster Management Authority (NDMA), lightning strikes killed at least 47 people, including women and children, during an overnight storm in different parts of the eastern Bihar state in East India and injured 22 others, mostly in rural areas.

Lightning strikes are fairly frequent in Bihar during the monsoon season which commenced from the second week of June to October. The downpours that started earlier this week were the first of this monsoon season.

Authorities in the neighboring state of Uttar Pradesh, located in northern parts of India, also reported that 20 more people lost their lives due to lightning strikes over the past two days.

According to the country's National Crime Records Bureau, back in 2014, over 2,500 Indians were hit by lightning and died. Every year, lightning claims the lives of thousands of Indian people, most of whom are farmers working in the fields.
