

Trump White House Cuts U.S. Environmental Programs Aimed at Preventing Lead Poisoning

Washington, May 31 (RHC)-- In environmental news, the EPA -- the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency -- plans to slash funding to programs aimed at protecting children and pregnant women from exposure to lead -- a neurotoxin known to cause brain damage.

The Washington Post reports the move would eliminate 70 EPA jobs while cutting nearly $17 million from the programs, which provide public education about the dangers of lead, as well as training to lead remediation workers.

An estimated 38 million U.S. homes contain lead-based paint, with lead poisoning hitting communities of color the hardest.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/131311-trump-white-house-cuts-us-environmental-programs-aimed-at-preventing-lead-poisoning>

Radio Habana Cuba