

New York Times Reports Mexican Government Spied on International Investigators Probing Ayotzinapa Case

Mexico City, July 11 (RHC)-- The New York Times is reporting that the Mexican government used an Israeli-made spy software to surveil a team of international investigators who had been dispatched to Mexico to investigate the high-profile disappearance of 43 students at the Ayotzinapa teachers' college in Guerrero in 2014.

The international investigators included some of Latin America's most prominent lawyers, who had been granted a form of diplomatic immunity to carry out their investigation. The Times has also reported the Mexican government also used the spying software called Pegasus to spy on Mexican human rights activists and journalists.
