Google Engineer's Sexist Manifesto Sparks Industry-wide Outrage

New York, August 10 (RHC)-- In technology news, a sexist manifesto written by a former Google engineer has sparked outrage for claiming that women are biologically inferior, making them less capable of assuming leadership roles in the tech industry.

In the manifesto, now fired Google software engineer James Damore also argued against programs to promote more women and workers of color in the tech industry. Damore e-mailed his manifesto to his co-workers last week, sparking widespread condemnation.

Radio Habana Cuba