

UN Human Rights Chief Calls on Spain to Investigate Referendum Violence

Geneva, October 3 (RHC)-- The United Nations has called on Spanish authorities to launch a thorough and impartial investigation into the violence perpetrated during Catalonia's independence referendum.

UN High Commissioner for Human Rights Zeid Ra'ad al-Husseini made the plea in a statement on Monday, voicing concern about the violence, during which hundreds were injured following clashes with police in the autonomous Spanish region.

The UN official said: "I am very disturbed by the violence in Catalonia on Sunday ... I urge the Spanish authorities to ensure thorough, independent and impartial investigations into all acts of violence." The UN rights chief also urged dialogue aimed at resolving the secession issue, saying: "I firmly believe that the current situation should be resolved through political dialogue, with full respect for democratic freedoms."

The remarks were made after Catalan authorities announced that clashes during the polling day on October 1st had left as many as 844 people injured as police tried to stop the vote from going ahead.

Separately on Monday, Catalan leader Carles Puigdemont called for international "mediation" in the crisis that has marred the independence referendum already banned by the central Spanish government. "It is not a domestic matter," Puigdemont told reporters at a news conference. "It's obvious that we need mediation ... which means there must be the presence of a third party, which must be international to be efficient."

He further said Europe could no longer continue to ignore the issue after almost 900 people sustained injuries, adding that Brussels lacked courage to sponsor the mediating role. "The European commission must encourage international mediation," Puigdemont noted. "It cannot look the other way any longer."

The Catalan leader also called on Madrid to withdraw all police forces it had deployed to the region from other parts of the country.

Puigdemont said that 73 Catalans had filed official complaints against police brutality after the independence vote, calling for "detente" as Catalans reeled from the clashes. The Catalan government says that 90 percent of voters backed the secession bid and registered a more than 42-percent turnout despite Madrid's attempts to boycott the referendum.

Meanwhile, the European Union demanded dialogue for the resolution of the crisis over Catalonia's referendum and called for an end to violence in the separatist region. "We call on all relevant players to now move very swiftly from confrontation to dialogue. Violence can never be an instrument in politics," European Commission spokesman Margaritis Schinas said. "We trust the leadership of Prime Minister Mariano Rajoy to manage this difficult process in full respect of the Spanish constitution and of the fundamental rights of citizens enshrined therein."

Catalonia, one of Spain's 17 autonomous regions, held a symbolic referendum back in November 2014, during which more than 80 percent of participants voted for independence, according to Catalan officials.
