The end of the almost 60-year-old economic blockade by the United States and the return of the territory occupied by a U.S. naval base in the eastern province of Guantanamo stood out among the demands that were raised at the forum, which was attended by trade union leaders and representatives of social movements and friendship associations, reports Prensa Latina news agency.

In an interview with Prensa Latina, U.S. activist Cheryl Labash said that her presence on the island as well as those of other U.S., Latin American, European, and Asian activists are a demonstration of solidarity with Cuba.

"We are here to support the Cuban people and to once again express our strong rejection of the economic, commercial and financial blockade of my country against Cuba," stressed the coordinator of the U.S. National Solidarity Network with Cuba.
