

U.S. lawmaker indicted for campaign finance violations

Sacramento, August 23 (RHC)-- U.S. Republican California Congressman Duncan Hunter, the second member of Congress to endorse candidate Donald Trump for president in 2016, has been indicted for campaign finance violations along with his wife, only weeks after the first congressman to endorse Trump, Chris Collins of New York, was also indicted.

Prosecutors say Hunter and his wife misused campaign funds for personal expenses, including expensive vacations and their children's school tuition. Hunter is up for re-election in November. His challenger is up-and-coming progressive candidate, 29-year-old Palestinian-Mexican-American Ammar Campa-Najjar.
