

Venezuela receives 69 tons of medicine from China

Caracas, May 28 (RHC)-- A total of 69 tons of medicines and health supplies sent from the People's Republic of China arrived Monday in Venezuela, adding up to the previous 200 tons that have been sent in the past.

The first shipment the Bolivarian Republic received from China, sent on March 29th, consisting of 65 tons of medicine -- while this delivery was mislabeled as 'military' support Venezuela. On May 13th and 16th, respectively, 71 and 64 more tons were sent.

China's assistance has been one of the various agreements the Venezuelan government has reached with other countries and international organizations in order to guarantee the availability of medicines in the country.

Both Venezuela and China have maintained close political and economic ties over the years. And China, along with Russia, has defended Venezuela at many U.N. Security Council meetings in which the U.S. and its allies attempt to pass resolutions against the Bolivarian Republic.
