

U.S. death toll from COVID-19 approaching a quarter of a million

Image not found or type unknown

Washington, November 17 (RHC)-- The United States recorded nearly 167,000 new coronavirus cases on Monday, the third-highest daily toll of the pandemic. The official U.S. death toll, already the highest in the world, is rapidly approaching a quarter-million — with 800 coronavirus deaths over the last 24 hours.

In California, Democratic Governor Gavin Newsom ordered stringent pandemic restrictions for three-quarters of his state's counties and is considering a statewide curfew across California.

Iowa's Republican Governor Kim Reynolds has ordered a statewide indoor mask mandate — with some exceptions — along with limits on bars and restaurants and a ban on certain public gatherings.

In Arizona, the Navajo Nation on Monday ordered nonessential businesses closed, canceled in-person classes and shut roads to visitors, warning of “uncontrolled spread” of the virus.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/240003-us-death-toll-from-covid-19-approaching-a-quarter-of-a-million>

Radio Habana Cuba