New York, January 21 (RHC)-- A poll by Morning Consult, a U.S.-based data intelligence firm, has revealed that UK Prime Minister Boris Johnson is currently the least popular world leader.

The results of the survey, which were published on Thursday, ranked Johnson last in a list of 13. His net approval rating now stands at -43, with only 26% of people supporting the embattled prime minister.

Among other leaders at the bottom of the table were French President Emmanuel Macron, on -25, and Brazil's Jair Bolsonaro, on -19. Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi was ranked as the most popular by those polled, gaining a net approval rating of 50.

Morning Consult's average sample size is around 45,000 in the US, while the sample size ranges from 3,000 to 5,000 in other countries. The firm surveyed opinions in some of the world's most developed democracies.

Johnson's approval rating peaked during the first lockdown in 2020, but has dipped considerably in recent weeks, following the 'Partygate' scandal. He is accused of breaking the Covid-contagion restrictions imposed by the government and is facing calls to resign.

The British prime minister has apologized for his actions and called on the public and his peers to await the findings of an internal enquiry into whether he actually broke the rules.
