

Latin American Congress on Food Science and Technology Starts in Cuba

Havana, Sept 16, (RHC), – The 6th Congress of Latin America and the Caribbean on Food Science and Technology is taking place in the Cuban capital, Havana, from Sept 15-22.

Researchers, cooks, artists, cinema directors and gastronomy journalists will attend this event organized by several institutions, including the Association for Science and Technology of Food of Cuba (ACTAC), which will be celebrating its 20 years.

They will discuss issues related to food culture in science, gastronomy and audiovisual mass-media, said the organizational committee in a statement. The congress aims to facilitate the collaboration between the technology and science, gastronomic tourism and culture sectors, and study the current trends in these areas.

As part of this meeting, a Latin American and Caribbean Exhibition-Fair for Food Industry (SIAL-CUBA 2014) will take place over the week, and count on the participation of national and foreign companies of processed food and equipment, Cuban restaurants, and academic health institutions.

According to the head of the organizational committee and president of the ACTAC, Jesus G. Yañez, the congress will be "an unforgettable opportunity".

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/nacionales/33772-latin-american-congress-on-food-science-and-technology-starts-in-cuba>

Radio Habana Cuba