

DoorDash workers protest food app's wage theft and other labor violations

Image not found or type unknown

A large, thick gray 'X' is drawn over a white square area, which is itself within a larger gray-bordered frame. This is a common placeholder for a missing image in digital documents.

New York, April 25 (RHC)-- In New York City, immigrant food delivery workers rallied outside the headquarters of DoorDash to demand the food delivery app cease its predatory labor practices, including wage theft.

The protest was organized by Los Deliveristas Unidos. Santos Suc, a 25-year-old delivery worker who's owed nearly $2,000 in wages by DoorDash dating back to 2022, told reporters: "It's not fair that they steal our wages. We want to work. We have families in our home countries, and our wages help support our families. ... We are here to demand justice from DoorDash. They are multimillionaires, and it's unacceptable that they owe us money. ... We face many risks. People think our work is easy. It's not. We risk our lives in the snow, in the rain, in the heat, in traffic. ... My message to my fellow immigrants is: Do not be afraid. We have to keep going. We are here to fight."

Earlier this year, DoorDash was ordered to pay nearly $17 million for unlawfully using customer tips to subsidize the wages of its delivery workers.

[SOURCE: DEMOCRACY NOW]

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/381532-door-dash-workers-protest-food-apps-wage-theft-and-other-labor-violations>

Radio Habana Cuba