Venice, June 29 (RHC)-- Hundreds of protesters marched through Venice to say "NO" to Amazon founder and billionaire Jeff Bezos's wedding on its third day of a multimillion-dollar celebration.

The world's fourth-richest man, Bezos, and his bride, Lauren Sanchez Bezos, got married in a private ceremony on Friday with about 200 celebrity guests on the secluded island of San Giorgio.

But before the final party on Saturday evening as part of a three-day wedding event, protesters filled Venice's central streets and held banners that read "Kisses Yes, Bezos No" and "No Bezos, no War".

Another poster read: "The planet is burning, but don't worry, here's the list of the 27 dresses of Lauren Sanchez."

For the past few days, residents have protested across the city over what they have said is anger as Venice suffers from over-tourism, high housing costs and the constant threat of climate-induced flooding.

Martina Vergnano, one of the demonstrators, said they were here to "continue ruining the plans of these rich people, who accumulate money by exploiting many other people ... while the conditions of this city remain precarious".

According to the Venetian Environmental Research Association, Bezos donated 1 million euros ($1.17 million) each to three environmental research organisations working to preserve Venice.

Flavio Cogo, a resident who also joined Saturday's protest, said they want a "free Venice, which is finally dedicated to its citizens". "Those donations are just a misery and only aimed at clearing Bezos' conscience," Cogo said.

Venetian businesses and political leaders welcomed the wedding, despite the protests, and hailed it as a significant economic boost.

Mayor Luigi Brugnaro said those protesting were "in contradiction with the history of Venice, which is a history of relations, contacts and business." "Bezos embodies the Venetian mentality. He is more Venetian than the protesters," said the center-right mayor, adding that he hoped Bezos would return to the city to do business.
